"It might be that this type of business would not be extremely profitable in the beginning, but it is an obligation which the bankers owe to the rural people. There still exists a strong suspicion on the part of the farmers toward banks and bankers—a suspicion which is founded almost entirely on misunderstandings. By taking care of the legitimate investments of farmers and thus preventing the large losses from spurious types of investment the banks would be enabled to take the first step in bringing about a more wholesome relation between banking and farming."

He warned of the drift to the cities, saying the problem must be faced before the farms are stripped of their population. He went on:

"The farmers of the United States have undoubtedly been in a state of unrest and discontent during the last four or five years. In fact, the present activities in rural sections are strikingly similar to those which brought forth the grange movement in the "Gos and the Popullst movement of the '89s."

"In customary Anglo-Saxon fashion the farmers have periodically turned to politics when they came to feel that their fortunes were at low ebb. It must now be ovident to most thoughful observers that the remody for unfavorable agricultural conditions of control university. The speakers were:
